Martin Luther King, Jr.

My drawing represents the many people who helped Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dream to become a reality. Martin Luther King, Jr. didn't want us to keep dreaming the same dream over again; he wanted us to act on it. I would like to explain my drawing in a way all can understand. The people I have drawn don't have eyes because they don't see prejudice of color. They also have tattoos that stand for the birth of Dr. King and melanin, a skin tone. Martin Luther King, Jr. is one of the many people who affect our racial issues by trying to make a change, but during this process he also taught us the concrete meaning of family, love, faith and hope.

The Journey is Not Complete
