The picture I have drawn is very simple and eloquent at the same time. It shows two men, both in a suit with a tie, a serious face and focused eyes fixed upon each other. There is also one other thing to this picture- the skin color of the two men. The two are about to shake hands, but are not close enough to do so. I feel this is how we are in America. We may have made laws about segregation, but inside some people don't believe that. As individuals we have not touched each other as the people we are.
